

GIM GUM IS DEAD; BULLETS MAY FLY IN CHINATOWN

Survivor of Many Tong Battles
Succumbs in Bed After Long Illness.

Gim Gum, the man of the hour, the survivor of many battles, the brains back of the raids and wars, which have raged in times past through the shadowy warrens of Mott and Pell Streets, succumbed this morning to the heart trouble which has had him in its grip since his stroke of paralysis six months ago. With his passing Chinatown loses one of the most striking figures in its history.

Gim Gum, the powerful of build; Gim Gum, the crafty of mind; Gim Gum, the diplomat, the interpreter, the white man's aid in ferreting out "celestial crimes," has been a marked man in Chinatown for years. As acknowledged leader of the On Leong Tong he was a fair target for the bullets of constant peril he died at last in his own bed with his wife by his bedside.

"Gim Gum hop gi la," say the sad-faced On Leongs as they pass each other on the street to-day and "Gim Gum hop gi la," say the Hip Hing, but the note of sorrow is lacking from the voices of the latter group, for "Gim Gum is no more," has been the news they have long awaited. Chinatown is deeply disturbed. The long established domination of Gim Gum is ended; who knows what may happen now?

Sunday afternoon, for the first time since his paralytic stroke, the On Leong leader sat for awhile on the front steps of his home at No. 24 Mott Street. His wife, Josephine Habin Gum, whom he married three years ago in Cleveland, Ohio, with the most elaborate festivities of which Chinatown has any record, was sitting beside him, and together they were enjoying the spring sunshine when two passing residents of the quarter stopped suddenly in front of the steps and silently looked the invalid over.

"Di go mi mi," grunted one to the other with an air of finality, and the two went on their way. "Soon go to the cemetery," was their verdict.

Gim Gum was startled. Was it a prophecy or a threat? He hastily retired within and sent for his old friend, Lieut. Burt. Burt, who knows Chinatown the way he knows the back of his hand, did all he could to reassure the weakened leader, but according to Mrs. Gum her husband began to die from the moment those two men read death in his face, and this morning at 3 o'clock the end came. He had been receiving treatments from a Dr. Donovan of Hoboken, but it was Dr. A. A. Levy of No. 63 East Third Street who attended him at the deathbed.

Gim Gum first came into prominence outside of Chinatown when he acted as interpreter and general minister plenipotentiary in the court of Judge Warren W. Foster of General Seasons at the time that official, in February, 1912, procured the signing of a peace treaty between the On Leongs and the Hip Hing Tong. Gum was Secretary of the On Leong Tong then and also Secretary of the Chinese Merchants Association.

Following these negotiations, Gum was made Chinese interpreter at several civil and criminal courts in New York, until he secured the conviction of Lee Hock and Ing Ring for shooting Lee Kay, nephew of Tom Lee, the "Mayor of Chinatown." Since his part in that trial he has fairly left his house.

Jeanne Lanvin's New Sport Suit Copied in Summer Corduroy $29.50

In a new French Red which is just a trifle darker than flame color.

In a new and brilliant Blue which is between royal and sapphire blues.

In that artistic tone of Castor which is always associated with Corduroy.

The smart severity of this Suit may be noted in the illustration—at the extreme left. The coats of the red and blue suits are lined with black-and-white Pekin-striped silk, and those of the Castor-color Suits are in a green-and-white silk printed after a Japanese design.

Cheruit's Sport Suit Copied at $29.50

The original model which was first presented in our Fashion Exhibition, "La Promenade des Toilettes," had a brownish homespun coat and blue skirt, but we have had it copied in sand color, navy and black twilled Gabardine, because it is a suit which is also appropriate for trotteur wear about town. Centre sketch.

Compose Suits of Flannel, $35

White skirts with hunter's green or fireman's red coats—the latter trimmed with white. Illustration at right.
